Inside The Numbers

Chantelle Cameron edged Mikaela Mayer on all three cards, and the punch stats show just how close it was. The two finished separated by a single connect, Cameron 148 and Mayer 147, but Cameron got there on 103 fewer punches, landing 29.7% to Mayer's 24.4%. The gap was in the jab: Cameron went 58 of 232 at 25% while Mayer threw 364 jabs and landed only 46 at 12.6%. Mayer's answer was the power shot, where she out-landed Cameron 101 to 90 and connected at 42.4% to 33.7%, with her fifth round the best of the fight for either woman at 25 of 71 total and 22 power punches landed. Cameron's work downstairs is what likely separated them, 28 body shots to Mayer's 14, and 25 of those came on power punches. The finish told the story too. Cameron swept the last three rounds on the count, landing 55 to 45 while connecting at 38%, 35.9% and 40.7%, and closed the tenth with her sharpest round of the night. On the round-by-round punch count it was five apiece, which is about as tight as a ten-rounder gets.
