Inside The Numbers

Hadribeaj, an unheralded challenger with no amateur background who came to boxing through mixed martial arts, made the most of his opportunity, outlanding Fundora 20-11 over the first two rounds. Though he gave up seven inches of height, he found success in the first round attacking from range. After Fundora clipped him early in the second, Hadribeaj fought the rest of the fight inside Fundora's reach. Fundora responded by shortening his punches, outlanding him 191-124 from round three on. His accuracy climbed from 8 percent in the first round to 33 percent in the 12th, while Hadribeaj's output slipped from 48 punches in the eighth to 32 in both the 10th and 11th. Hadribeaj lost a point for holding in the third and another in the 11th. Fundora finished with a 52-26 edge in body punches landed. In the closing seconds of the 12th, Fundora landed a series of lefts that left Hadribeaj on his back. Hadribeaj made it to his feet, but the referee stopped the fight at 2:59 of the 12th.
